(Sami, a young boy, is going to his new school for the first time.)

On the way, Sami is slowly waking up. In fact, he didn't sleep well.

He had a nightmare. He dreamt that the other pupils had children's bodies and bird's heads. And for the teacher, it was the opposite; she had a human face with a mean look and a huge eagle's body.

Then, he thinks back to his village, in Labacia. His friends are probably going back to their little school over there. He remembers the brick walls, the dirt floor and the well in the middle of the yard. At breaktime, they all liked to sit in the shade of the big tree that stood to the left of the well, when entering the yard.

To get to his new school, Sami first turns right from his house then he follows the trees and then takes the first street on the left. Finally, he walks straight on. The school is in this street, just opposite the park.

This morning, however, he doesn't recognize the route. Was that tree there yesterday?

Sami thinks to himself that his memory must be playing tricks on him. He can't get rid of this strange feeling and the images from his nightmare come back to him.

Suddenly, a cold wind starts blowing and Sami pulls the cap his father gave him down on his head, and he feels better straight away.

When he arrives at the school, Sami stops immediately. Clouds have covered the sky and some small drops of rain are beginning to fall. He doesn't wait any longer and goes into the school.

There, he discovers the playground, it's very different from the one in Labacia. He doesn't know where to go. So, he takes out the timetable he was given when he came to enroll, but it isn't much help. He doesn't understand any of it!

Suddenly, a storm breaks out. Sami just manages to avoid the big drops of rain that are now falling in the playground. Under the covered part of the playground, the children are agitated and pushing to get out of the rain. It looks like a chicken coop and reminds him of the nightmare he had the night before.

Everybody seems to be avoiding him. Suddenly, a boy comes towards him. He says something to Sami, pointing at his cap but Sami doesn't understand. How could he? He doesn't speak Takoni, the official language of his new country. The boy gives up and walks away, showing his annoyance.

As he's trying to hold back his tears, Sami's eyes meet those of another boy who is wearing a blue jumper. The boy points to a sign in the playground which shows a picture of a crossed out cap and then moves away quickly. Sami now understands that caps are forbidden in this school.

Finally, the bell rings and the teacher comes to collect her pupils. She looks strict, and has a long, hooked nose. She is wearing a long, black gown that makes it look like she has huge wings. It's incredible, she looks like the eagle from Sami's dream!

Once everybody is in the classroom, the teacher immediately asks the pupils to stick their timetables in their copybooks. He understands what he has to do from watching the other pupils but he feels confused.

At that moment, the teacher stands next to him. With one hand resting on his shoulder, she introduces him to the rest of the class. Sami feels relieved and relaxes. He doesn't understand everything she says but he lets himself get carried away by the warm tone in her musical voice. His new classmates are now looking at him with interest, and, among them, he sees the boy in the blue jumper smiling. A ray of sunlight strokes Sami's cheek. It's his first day at school and everything is going to be fine.
